MEMPHIS ARRAYED IN GALA DRESS

From a survey the proposed waterway have already reported that the project was feasible, and Congress at its last session authorized the appropriation of $100,000 to defray the expense of the survey.

The benefits to be derived by a large section of the middle West and South by the completion of this great improvement scheme have been readily recognized and appreciated. All the States of the Mississippi Valley have been prompt in their endorsement of the project, while the residents of sections more remote, but also standing in benefit, immensely from such an enterprise, have not hesitated to voice their approval.

Prominent Men at the Convention.
In addition to President Roosevelt the speakers to be heard tomorrow include Lyman E. Cooley, an eminent civil engineer of Chicago; John L. Vance, president of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association; Representative Theodore E. Burton, chairman of the Inland Waterways Commission; Joseph W. Folk, governor of Missouri; Charles S. Deneen, governor of Illinois; and Albert B. Cummins, governor of Iowa. W. K. Kaysanough, president of the association, will preside and Governor Patterson of Tennessee will welcome the distinguished visitors.

Speakers at the second day's session will include Governors Broocks of Wyoming, Chamberlain of Oregon, Howard of Florida, Burke of North Dakota, and Plundell of Arkansas.

At the banquet, which will conclude the convention, the speakers and their topics will be as follows: "The Pleasurability of American Life," Governor Henry A. Buchtel of Colorado; "Fourteen Feet Through the Valley," John Sharp Williams of Mississippi; "Kansas and Transportation," Governor Edward W. Hoch of Kansas, and "The Value to Louisiana of the Deep Waterway," Governor Newton C. Blanchard of Louisiana.

In addition to those named above it is expected that a number of other governors, congressmen and other public men will make informal talks during the two days the convention will be in session.

HAS NO USE FOR MILKSOPS

resent insult or injury, but who, himself never inflicts insult or injury, is kindly, good-natured, thoughtful of the rights of others—in short, a good man to do business with or have live in the next house or have as a friend. On the other hand, the man who lacks any of these qualities is sure to be objectionable. If a man is afraid to hold his own, if he will submit tamely to wrongdoing, he is contemptible. If he is a bully or an oppressor, a man who wrongs others, he is even worse, he should be hunted out of the community. But, on the whole, the most contemptible position that can possibly be assumed by any man is that of blustering, of bragging, of insulting or wronging other people, while yet expecting to go through life unchallenged, and being always willing to back down and accept humiliation if readiness to make good is demanded.

Advocates the Golden Rule.
Well, this is just as true of a nation as of an individual, and dealing with other nations we should act as we expect a man who is both, game and decent in private life. There are few things cheaper and more objectionable, whether on the part of the public man or private man, on the part of a writer or of a speaker, an individual or a group of individuals, than a course of conduct which is insulting or hurtful, whether in speech or act, to individuals of another nation or to the representatives of another nation or to another nation itself. But the policy becomes infamous from the standpoint of the interests of the United States when it is combined with the refusal to take those measures of preparation which can alone secure us from aggression on the part of others.

"Peace With Insult" Poor Policy.
The policy of "peace with insult" is the very worst policy upon which it is possible to embark, whether for a nation or an individual. To be rich, unarmed, and yet insolent and aggressive, is to court well-nigh certain disaster. The only safe and honorable rule of foreign policy for the United States is to show itself courteous toward other nations, scrupulous not to infringe upon their rights, and yet able and ready to defend its own. This nation is now on terms of the most cordial good will with all other nations. Let us make it a prime object of our policy to preserve these conditions. To do so it is necessary on the one hand to mete out a generous justice to all other peoples and show them courtesy and respect; and on the other hand, as we are yet a good way off from the millennium, to keep ourselves in such shape as to make it evident to all men that we desire peace because we think it is right and just and not from motives of weakness or timidity. As for the first requisite, this means that not only the government but the people as a whole shall act in the needed spirit:

for otherwise the folly of a few individuals may work lasting discredit to the whole nation.

Build up the Navy.
The second requisite is more easily secured—let us build up and maintain at the highest point of efficiency the United States navy. In any great war on land we should have to rely in the future as we have relied chiefly in the past upon volunteer soldiers; and although it is indispensable that our little army, an army ludicrously small relatively to the wealth and population of this mighty nation, should itself be trained to the highest point and should be valued and respected as is demanded by the worth of the officers and enlisted men, yet it is not necessary that this army should be large as compared to the armies of other great nations. But as regards the navy all this is different. We have an enormous coast line, and our coast line is on two great oceans. To repel hostile attacks the fortifications and not the navy, must be used; but the best way to parry is to hit—no fight can be won except by hitting—and we can only hit by means of the navy. It is utterly impossible to improvise even a makeshift navy under the conditions of modern warfare.

Times Have Changed.
Since the days of Napoleon no war between two great powers has lasted as long as it would take to build a battleship, let alone a fleet of battleships; and it takes just as long to train the crew of a battleship as it does to build it; and as regards the most important thing of all, the training of the officers, it takes much longer. The navy must be built and all its training given in time of peace. When once war has broken out it is too late to do anything. We now have a good navy, not yet large enough for our needs, but of excellent material. Where a navy is as small as ours, the cardinal rule must be that battleships shall not be separated. This year I am happy to say that we shall begin a course which I hope will be steadily followed hereafter, that, namely, of keeping the battleship fleet alternately in the Pacific and in the Atlantic.

Cruise of National Fleet.
Early in December the fleet will begin its voyage to the Pacific, and it will number, among its formidable fighting craft the three great battleships, named, respectively, the Illinois, the Missouri, and the Kentucky. It is a national fleet in every sense of the term, and its welfare should be, and I firmly believe it is, as much a matter of pride and concern for every man in the farthest interior to our country as for every man on the seacoast. A long voyage is mighty good training; and not the least good it will do will be to show just the points where our naval preparations are strengthening. Incidentally, I think the voyage will have a good effect, for, to judge by their comments on the movement, some excellent people in my own section of the country need to be reminded that the Pacific coast is exactly as much a part of this nation as the Atlantic coast.
